I'm ok. I slept it off after iv fluids and a lot of blood work on Monday night. I have bruises left all over my arms and hands from getting stuck over 10 times. I'm going out to smoke now. Will try to get in touch over the phone when I get back. Thanks for being there.

Rebecca,

I'm hesitant to call you because we really only met online at temple once. I have been viciously hacked (link) by someone that contacted me online last year over the pandemic -- it's related. I know it sounds weird, but I really do not feel like chatting on the phone. Someone that used to be around me is a big black hat hacker and "phone phreaker" from 2600 Magazine that can redirect cellular calls any which way he wants to manipulate things. I do need to talk with someone though. I really don't have anyone close by geographically with the pandemic right now. Good friends, at least some I used to think were, are basically willing to abandon me over their own malice, ignorance and intentional misunderstandings of what Jason has done by stalking me (on and off) these last 15-17 years since I was a freshmen in his class in Urbana, IL. It's convenient for them that way, I guess.

Can I tell you more about over GMail while I get drunk and fall asleep tonight?

I just want to be completely cool with you and say something. I am actually straight myself. I have thought about the asexual label, but it's really just abstinence with attractions to me from time to time (Thank you, Anna). My sister is, however, bisexual. I am not judgemental. I just do not want to have given any wrong impressions if we meet.

I could really use a fresh big bottle of absolut vodka if you can drive (I can pay you back over Zelle). I have had 1/2 a covid shot. Maybe if you know a good liquor store after Shabbat, we could just talk in the parking lot. GA Tech doesn't let any non-residents in the building without a fine right now...

It is, BTW, a big mitzvah to loan a semi-stranger from your temple a bottle of vodka on a week like this. Basically, I will go back to services next week to visit with y'all again. I'm heinously pissed at God right now, if not in general.

I am a total misfit everywhere I go to begin with. The gay temple actually opened its warm arms to me and my judgemental mom one weekend and offered me a friend to call. I know you do meal deliveries too... BIG MITZVAH.

>I am waiting at Emory ER for signs of a small stroke.
>This has been happening for a while. Going to temple helped bring a resolution.
>Thank God and the rabbi for the big gay purim.
>oh no! what happened!

I wanted to issue you my expression of thank y'all for being there for me after I attended services with my mother at the gay temple many times this year. It goes something like the following:

It is a Unicode emoji expression of grief that exists in our common vernacular just for situations like these.

In the future, be advised that it is not only polite, but a core tenet of being a good Jewish community member to welcome newcomers merrily when they arrive on the doorstep of your temple. After I told you I was actually straight (but non-judgmental), you would not offer me words of help after I needed the ride home from Emory's ER that night. What were you expecting me to lick your pussy all nice, or something? I have other good friends to talk to online. Thank you for your time.
